Global Markets and Local Livelihoods: Agricultural Transition in Asia

Prof. Krisnawati Suryanata

The presentation will deal specifically with landscape change, concentrations of benefits and patterns of vulnerability, owing to the agricultural transition.

KRISNAWATI SURYANATA is Associate Professor of Geography at the University of Hawai'i at Mānoa. She received her undergraduate degree in soil science from Bogor Agricultural Institute in Indonesia, an MA in Geography from UH Mānoa, and a PhD in Geography from UC Berkeley. She was a recipient of the East West Center Graduate Degree Fellowship in 1985 while working on her Master's program.

Her research interests are in agrarian change, resource access, and political ecology with a regional focus on Southeast Asia (especially Indonesia) and Hawai'i. Her presentation will explore issues that arise from the globalization of agricultural and food systems.

This seminar is open to the public.
