7. I am married. May my spouse join me in Hawaii if I become an ADB-JSP recipient?

ADB-JSP fellows are required to come to Honolulu alone for the first semester of the award to become acquainted with the Center, the University of Hawaii, and Honolulu before arranging to have their families join them from abroad. This is a non-negotiable stipulation. The Asian Development Bank-Japan Scholarship Program involves more than simply financial aid. It also requires a significant time commitment beyond full-time graduate course requirements in the evenings and on weekends. For this reason, as a condition of the scholarship, recipients must come alone for the first semester and demonstrate their ability to fulfill all the scholarship program requirements while simultaneously achieving a very good academic performance at the university. After the first semester, student fellows who have shown that they can manage both their fellowship commitments and graduate courses with strong academic standing may request visa sponsorship for a family member to join them. U.S. immigration policy requires that they demonstrate eligibility for J-2 visa sponsorship by providing documentation of sufficient financial resources beyond the scholarship to cover living and health insurance costs for each family member who comes. Two shopping malls are a short bus ride or long walk away. See: <https://ewcparticipantinfo.org/dining-shopping/> \(Back to Top\)

10. Besides schoolwork, what else is there for international students to do?

When not hitting the books, there are lots of entertaining things for everyone to do in Honolulu and other places on the island of Oahu, many of which are inexpensive or free. These include great hiking trails and ocean activities. Other good suggestions for extracurricular activities can be found at: <https://ewcparticipantinfo.org/to-do-on-oahu/> \(Back to Top\)
