Pakistan and India have a bilateral treaty (Indus waters treaty 1960) to solve the water sharing issues of 6 joint rivers, but in recent years this treaty has not been working well on the permanent Indus waters commission level. Pakistan took the case of Baglihar and Kishanganga hydro-power projects before the court of arbitration and neutral experts of the World Bank. The general perception in Pakistan is that India is stopping the waters of Pakistan in occupied Kashmir and this fear is growing day by day. Many experts now show concern over this issue which could potentially turn into a new war.
