Panel: Life and Longevity

Addressing the issues of inequity and inequality is the basic principle for a futuristic and composite understanding of life. Economically lesser privileged societies often ignore the hierarchy of issues in development. The lopsided growth overlooks the basic rights creating a chasm between mere living and a dignified life. Today the societies in particular and the world in general need to understand the meaning of a harmonious and balanced life. Through social justice discriminations could be decreased and an ambience of trust and sharing could easily be generated. If an individual is enabled by recognizing his/her rights, then without an iota of doubt, he/she is ready to engage with a new vision of responsibilities. To create a society with its moral strengths disparities based upon gender, class, and economic status have to be seriously addressed eliminating biases regarding education, economic opportunities and class divisions.
